THURSDAY May, 14 1908

Carry Nation came to town on Tuesday's train and was greeted at the depot by a crowd of the curiously inclined. Mrs. Nation was immediately recognized in the grumpy like old woman who descended to the platform. She is old, with a few wrinkles, but she is inclined to stoutness. One can hardly keep from feeling sorry that her appearance is so out of keeping with her occupation. Instead of gadding about the country making fanatical talks at a much per talk to and eyes drawn together through curiosity, it looks as though she should be at home caring for her invalid daughter, for whom she provides so well out of the proceeds from her lectures. Mrs. Nation's speech is all that newspaper fancy has painted. To begin with she is a prohibitionist; she can say nothing too mean against whiskey, tobacco, the two great political parties, the Anti-Saloon League, President Roosevelt, Secret Orders and people generally who disagree with her. She has been married twice and has an invalid daughter. Her first husband drank himself to death in eighteen months after marriage, and number two got a divorce after twenty-four years. Her saloon smashing record is confined entirely to the prohibition state of Kansas. All the money she makes goes to the support of a home for the wives of drunkards and for medical treatment for her invalid daughter. She seems to fully believe that she has been ordained of God, and by perversion of Scripture shows where the old prophets foretold her coming and her work. It is not probable that Mrs. Nation does any good by her lectures, but certainly she can do no harm. Her tirade against the liquor business is none too severe, and where she is wrong she is not taken seriously enough to create a sentiment against such powers of good as the Anti-Saloon League and similar organizations.
